He points out that the great reduction in the forms which goes with the adoption of the classification system will make the clerical labor of the local boards much lighter, and by removing the cause of the bewildrement which overwhelmed most registrants upon their introduction to the old system render confusion far less likely.

Believes Draft Permanent

The Provost Marshal General makes it plain that he regards the selective draft as a permanent institution in this country.

"The duty of citizenship has taken on a new light for all of us and there has been no heaitstion among our people in performing that duty," he says. "Whether Germany has taught us or whether we have learned it ourselves, we know one thing so clearly and so wall that wa will never again have we will never again have volunteer method of raising "The volunteer method of raising an army for war is gone. It will never return. The principle of selection has been tried and proved by our people. "The principle of selection is established. The system for selection, improved as we can improve it must become and remain a permanent part of our governmental system for war. It is a link which binds closer our union of states and our resulting general government. It is for this reason that I say that we are standing not at the portals that we are standing not at the portals of a past, but rather at the threshold of a future."

General Crowder intimates that the General Crowder intimates that the training of youths of eighteen, nine-teen and twenty may be a part of our military preparation before it becomes necessaryto call upon the men who compose Class IV in the new classification. The training of such candidates before the time comes for the actual calling to active service, has been advised by advocates of, a universal military training law.
